

Historic, Archive Document

Do not assume content reflects current scientific knowledge, policies, or practices.

ANY FOUR VARIETIES FOR $5.00, OR THE ENTIRE COLLECTION OF NINE VARIETIES FOR $10.00

ANNETTE: Mahogany red, almost a blackred. This lovely 6-inch flower I consider more than unusual. It has a deep, wide chrome throat. Its height is only 20 inches, which is quite unusual for a Daylily in this color class, making it most suitable for the foreground in your plantings. There are so very few dwarf Daylilies in colors. April, May and June.

CARNIVAL: Now here's a real circus-wagon red with a deeper rich red eye zone and when this is in full bloom, you've got something in your garden to really make them take note. Its throat is chrome. Four inch bloom. Height 3 feet. May and June.

HONEYMOON: This is a most unusual color of creamy buff with the deepest rich maroon-purple eye zone and a most undescribable velvety sheen. Its petals are ruffled and it has a lovely green throat. A real jewel if there ever was one. Four and one-half inch bloom. Height 4 feet. April, May and again in late summer.

LAMPASAS: This beautiful bi-color has rosy petals and lemon sepals and a rich chrome throat, quite unusual for a bloom with lemon sepals. Five-inch flower. Height 3 feet. June and July.

MICHAEL ROBINSON: This is another deep rich mahogany with a lovely velvet texture that looks like real satin. The sepals are slightly lighter red. The throat is gold shading to real chartreuse at the base. The petals are very wide and slightly ruffled. Five one-half inch bloom. Height 4 feet. April, May, June and again in September.

MYKAWA: This is one of the loveliest mahogany reds that ever grew. Its wide petals are $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches across, and it stands our hottest sun. Its texture has the loveliest satin sheen that simply glistens in the sun, and it opens full. Its yellow throat is small. This, of all reds that are really red, blooming at its particular season, is a dream. Height $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet. April, May and June.

SYLVIA: This Daylily was introduced by me some few seasons ago, but on account of demand, it had to be taken off the market. Now, we have enough stock to offer it again. Its large bloom, with petals of rosy-pink with its deepest rosy eye zone, is simply breathtaking. Its sepals are lemon, and it keeps excellent as a cut flower. Blooms 5 inches across. Height $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet. May and June.

THALIA: The first really orchid shaped bloom we have ever produced. This was also offered a few seasons ago, but the demand exceeded our supply, therefore, it was taken off the market until our stock was replenished. We are now offering it again for the first time in three years. The base color is canary yellow. Its graceful and flary petals and sepals are overcast a rich rosy brown. The sepals are almost completely twisted and the petals are pinched. You would hardly recognize this as a Daylily at all. Five inches across. Height $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet. May and June.

TOPEKA: The most intense fiery red I have ever seen with a yellow throat. It has a velvety sheen that stands our hottest sun and is one of the most profuse bloomers I've seen. This one will be loved, I'm sure, always. Blooms 4 inches in diameter. Height 3 feet. April, May and June.

Russell Gardens

NINE SOLID ACRES HEMEROCALLIS

Spring, Texas

